GLOBAL WARMING

This is how it should look like.

Are politicians serious about this?

Global Warming is a current issue. It involves a great amount of spheres that include political, economical, and of course environmental. This matter has been discussed along several years and its existence is still denied by some groups. Then the Global Warming concept and effects would be developed.

Global Warming is defined as the increase in the world's average temperature, this rise in temperature could have been caused by intrinsic and extrinsic reasons. Earth climate has cycles which involve fluctuations in temperature among centuries, that includes increasing and decreasing stages, for example, the well known Ice Age. Nevertheless human impact could not be denied, industrialization and over use of non-renewable resources have contributed to this climate change. Along industrialization there has been negative side effects on the environment.

The most developed countries are those who pollute more. USA is the number one country in terms of contamination with green-house gasses effects. However some of the developing countries are contributing in making the problem worse. Countries like China and India are responsible for great part of the contamination, their rapid industrial growth .

Some governments assume a position of denial and refuse to accept that industrialization and use of fossil originate fuels are the main cause for the climate change even tough there are many studies proving the direct relation between this factors and most of the countries agreed with some initiatives as the Kyoto protocol

Global warming is a reality, development of civilization has brought side effects affecting on a negative way the environment an nature. Until man kind, headed by governments could commit to lessen this negative effect, the whole planet will be suffering and climate will keep changing affecting and taking lives and resources. It is a great vicious circle.
